The Christmas Wish

It was Christmas Eve, and the snow was falling softly outside. Inside, the house was warm and cozy, filled with the scent of pine needles and gingerbread.

A young girl named Sarah sat by the fire, watching the flames dance. She was thinking about all the wonderful things about Christmas. She loved the carols, the presents, and the special time she got to spend with her family.

But most of all, Sarah loved making Christmas wishes. Every year, she would write down her wish on a piece of paper and then burn it in the fire. She believed that if she did this, her wish would come true.

This year, Sarah's wish was simple: she wanted her family to be happy. She had seen her parents struggling lately, and she just wanted them to be able to enjoy the holiday season.

Sarah took a deep breath and wrote her wish on a piece of paper. Then, she carefully folded the paper and placed it in the fire. She watched as the flames licked at the paper, and then it was gone.

Sarah closed her eyes and made a wish. She wished that her family would be happy, that they would always have each other, and that they would always be there for her.

When she opened her eyes, Sarah felt a sense of peace. She knew that her wish would come true.
