After my treatment, I was cancer-free. But I knew that the cancer could come back at any time. I lived in fear of recurrence.

One day, I was watching a TV show about cancer-detecting dogs. I was amazed by how these dogs could sniff out cancer cells. I wondered if there was a dog that could detect the return of my cancer.

I did some research and found a breeder who specialized in training cancer-detecting dogs. I contacted the breeder and told her my story. She agreed to send me a dog.

A few weeks later, I met my new dog, Bear. Bear was a golden retriever, and he was the sweetest dog I had ever met. He was also very intelligent.

I trained Bear to detect the scent of cancer cells. It only took a few weeks for him to learn.

Bear became my constant companion. He went with me everywhere I went. He would sniff my breath, my urine, and my stool. He was always on the lookout for the scent of cancer cells.

In 2014, Bear alerted me to the recurrence of my cancer. I went to the doctor and had a mammogram. The mammogram confirmed that the cancer had returned.

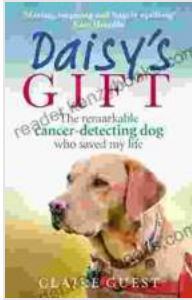

I was grateful to Bear for detecting the recurrence of my cancer. I knew that if I had not had Bear, the cancer would have spread and I would have died.

I underwent surgery to remove the cancer. I am now cancer-free again.

I am so grateful to Bear for saving my life. He is my hero.

Bear's story is an inspiration to everyone. It shows that dogs can do amazing things. They can save lives.
